This was a very ordinary incident of fiself, but, in view of the fact that on the most fitting occasions Senator Hill has studiously avoided paying his respects to the Democratic President from spects to the Democratic President from his own State, it occasioned surprise and comment among all circles. What did it mean? was the question on every lip. Some said it was the consummation of the friendly arrangements made with Croker and Murphy at the White House last week. Others said that it was a personal notification given by Senator Hill that if Mr. Maxwell's appointment swance, it would be opposed.

There has been absolutely nothing to show that American interests in Hawaii have been in the slightest danger of impairment; that any foreign power has even harbored a thought of interfering with the affairs of the islands, or that the Hawalian people desire annexation to the United States. But if a change of our policy were desirable, it should only be decided upon after the most mature deliberation by a responsible Administration recently clothed with power by the will of the people. The attempt of a repudlated party to rush such a change through, helter-skelter, in its dying hour, was most unbecoming.
